

FTI Consulting Partners with Google News Initiative and Local Media Association to Launch Digital Subscriptions Lab

March 26, 2019

Program Aims to Develop Sustainable Business Model for the Newspaper Industry

WASHINGTON, March 26, 2019 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- FTI Consulting, Inc. (NYSE: FCN) today announced the creation of the Digital Subscriptions Lab in partnership with the Google News Initiative and Local Media Association ("LMA"), a joint effort to help develop a sustainable and thriving business model for the newspaper industry.

A select group of publishers from a cross-section of small, medium and large newspapers across North America will be chosen to participate in the six-month program. The publishers will undergo a mix of quantitative and qualitative market research, examining existing and potential reader segments to better understand the addressable market, readers' willingness to pay and more.

FTI Consulting's efforts in the partnership will be led by Senior Managing Director Ken Harding and Managing Director Peter Doucette from the Publishing group of the Telecommunications, Media & Technology practice. Mr. Doucette previously was Chief Consumer Revenue Officer at The Boston Globe and helped develop that newspaper's paid subscription model and dual-website strategy.

"Some of the largest national news organizations are experiencing early success with digital subscription models, with several crossing 1 million subscribers," Mr. Doucette said. "However, at the local and metro levels, attaining a transformative digital model is more elusive, with a less clearly defined path to success. Independent publishers face a unique set of challenges, requiring both a strategy and a subscription model playbook tailored to their audience. This unique, strategic partnership will provide publishers with the opportunity to learn from each other and enable us to develop a new digital subscription model blueprint for the entire industry."

FTI Consulting will perform a full diagnostic evaluation of each participating publisher across multiple dimensions — including people, process, technology, marketing and content — to benchmark current performance, identify short-term optimization opportunities and recommend longer-term transformation roadmaps. This includes providing a detailed scorecard to show how each publisher sizes up, and a dashboard for measuring ongoing progress.

The publishers will have support from Google teams that bring expertise in data, technology, product, subscriptions and more. LMA, which serves more than 3,000 newspapers, television stations, radio stations, directories, pure plays and research and development partners, will convene in-person and virtual meetings for the publishers to share learnings and best practices.

The outcomes of the Digital Subscriptions Lab will be shared with the industry at large through playbooks, experiential learning opportunities and in-person sessions and will be revealed at Elevate, a joint conference produced by LMA and the Local Media Consortium on September 18 in Chicago.
